Dear editor,

In response to a recent editorial (Sentinel- 2/3/17) on “Why We Marched”. Isn’t it amazing when we find the people who preach tolerance have found themselves in a situation they never realistically thought they would be in and thus redefine what tolerance is. It must be that tolerance means to have an open mind until it gets closed by an opposing opinion.

Not sure what the writer meant when she included “the Sabbath” in her opinion. I believe she was referencing former Blue Laws. They were a misguided mistake by overzealous religionists. Under such O.T. Jewish law the consequence for ignoring that particular law was death (Ex 31:14).

What really struck me as hypocritical was her woeful lament over defunding Planned Parenthood as though they are the Messiah that the world can’t possibly survive without, even though they aren’t the only providers for women’s health. If anyone wants their tax dollars given to Margret Sanger’s population control organization, why not just support it directly and leave the collective consciences of the rest of us taxpayers alone?

And whatever happened to fending for the innocent, in this case the unborn, who need no vetting since they pose no threat to anyone? Where’s the ‘adult’ responsibility where abortion has become just “an integral part of their health care”? “It’s my body!” Yea, but shouldn’t that same right be given to the other person, i.e. the one in the womb? Isn’t that real equality?

It’s interesting how progressive institutions make their case for murder with such phrases as “These organizations are at the front lines of pandemics” and how “They need our support and American people need this protection”. Protection from what or who? An unborn child? Wow.
