Dear editor,

Okay, I'll take the bait. The front page photo of a woman holding a sign at a recent borough council meeting, stacked in favor of the LGBTQ community, got a lot of attention. It read, blasphemously, "Jesus had 2 dads". It showed an obvious ignorance of Biblical truth for the purpose of theatrics. This is the type of "in your face" audacity that has emboldened this group, and the tyranny that the majority on borough council displayed, when chiding those consciences against the ordinance, was repugnant. It was concluded that it doesn't matter what you believe, as long as you leave it at the church building on Sunday and not live your faith in your place of business on Monday. How detestably hypocritical. In a free market economy, if business owners refuse business on whatever grounds, aren't they only hurting their own bottom line? Don't they have that right?

At the same meeting a self-proclaimed bi-sexual girl spoke of faith as being a cloak used by "bigots, homophobes and racists". When I asked for a show of hands by all those in attendance who purported to be Christians, many hands were raised, even of those who bore the "LOVE" sticker which favored the ordinance. Yet those who spoke out against it were hissed and degraded by verbal interruptions from those who wore said labels.

When a statement was made and case cited how the supreme court ruled in favor of conscience Sean Shultz countered how other laws had since taken precedence. In a prior meeting he also maintained, in order to denigrate Biblical input, that according to the Bible women had no rights to divorce? One wonders then how often he has cited laws as one would toss spaghetti at the wall.
